The Carleton Review of International Affairs is a student-run peer-reviewed journal which publishes outstanding work by students on international affairs in theory or in practice. It is interdisciplinary in its focus, recognizing the need for a multitude of perspectives and approaches in a globalized world. CRIA offers students an opportunity to develop professionally either through completing research writing to publication standards or by serving on its peer review board. The Co-Editors of CRIA annually conduct a call for papers and reviewers and are responsible for all aspects of the publishing process. CRIA is funded by the Carleton United Nations Society and governed by the Society’s Board of Executives.

The United Nations Society is Carleton’s premier international affairs forum and Canada’s elite Model UN team. Its mandate is to promote understanding of global politics in the Carleton community and for its Members to excel at competitive Model UN conferences around the world. The Society is a non-partisan, non-advocacy, not-for-profit organization that is in no way affiliated with the actual United Nations.

Visit our website at www.unsociety.com

THE VIEWS EXPRESSED IN THE CARLETON REVIEW OF INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS DO NOT REFLECT THE POSITION OF THE UNITED NATIONS SOCIETY, BUT THOSE OF THE INDIVIDUAL AUTHORS.

Copyright © 2018 The Individual Authors. Journal Compilation Copyright © 2018 The United Society. All Rights Reserved. Printed in Canada. Cover image, “Amazon boat in Rio Negro River Manaus AM”, originally posted to Panoramio and uploaded to Wikimedia Commons on 23/05/14. Author: James Martins. The use of this image by CRIA is in no way meant to suggest that the original user endorses CRIA, its mandate, or any of the author perspectives contained in this journal.
Editorial Board, Peer Review Board, and Journal Contributors

Editorial Board

- Keean Nembhard (Editor-in-Chief) is entering his 4th year at Arthur Kroeger College, pursuing a Bachelor of Global and International Studies from Carleton University. He was the 2017-2018 President of the Carleton United Nations Society, and works as a Page for the Senate of Canada.

- Seth Eichhorst is finishing his degree at Arthur Kroeger College, pursuing a Bachelor of Global and International Studies with a specialization in International Economic Policy. He is currently working at the Canadian Embassy in Beijing.

- Rebecca Henfrey is completing her degree through the Arthur Kroeger College, pursuing a Bachelor of Public Affairs and Policy Management from Carleton University. She is currently employed with the Department of National Defence.

- Emily Manzerolle is completing her degree through the Arthur Kroeger College, pursuing a Bachelor of Public Affairs and Policy Management from Carleton University. She is currently employed with the Department of Canadian Heritage.

- Jacqueline Mathers is finishing her degree at Arthur Kroeger College, pursuing a Bachelor of Global and International Studies with a specialization in Global Development. She is currently employed with Friends of the Earth International.

Peer Review Board

The Editorial Board would like to offer special thanks to the following Peer Reviewer’s for their valuable contributions to this year’s publication.

- Alex Berryman, MA Graduate, Norman Paterson School of International Affairs, Carleton University

- Charles Boutet, MA Candidate, Graduate School of Public and International Affairs, University of Ottawa

- Morgan Cameron, MSc. Candidate, Global Governance and Diplomacy, University of Oxford

- Eric Fleming, MA Candidate, Norman Paterson School of International Affairs, Carleton University

- Samir Kassam, MSc. Graduate, School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London

- Valerie Kiefer, MA Graduate Norman Paterson School of International Affairs, Carleton University

- Nikola Milutinovic, MA Candidate, Queen’s Economics Department, Queen’s University
Journal Contributors

Jack Bowness recently graduated from St Francis Xavier University, where he received an Honours degree from the department of Political Science. His research interests are the Political Economy of Latin America, International Trade Analysis, and Natural Resource Management. His belief in the power of primary source research, has taken him to the Savannah Zone of Northern Ghana, where he studied Foreign Direct Investment Strategies; and most recently to Southern Mexico, where he interviewed local indigenous people to explore the ways in which the North American Free Trade Agreement has impacted their daily lives. He currently works as a Research Assistant, supporting Dr. Yvon Grenier of St Francis Xavier University, with his project, “Cultural Regimes and Artistic Freedom in Latin America.” He will be continuing his studies at Carleton University at the Norman Paterson School of International Affairs.

Laurie Chandler is a 4th year student at Carleton University who recently finished her Honours Research Paper about domestic violence in rural Alberta. She is a feminist and passionate about addressing domestic violence. She lives her passion daily through work with Sagesse, a Calgary based non-profit that empowers individuals, communities and organizations to disrupt cycles of violence. Laurie identifies as a disrupter, someone who is willing to challenge you to find new ways of learning or unlearning. She is influenced by Hannah Arendt who believed deeply that thinking and thinking deeply is what makes us human.

Mary Gramiak is an upper-year global politics student at Carleton University and full-time junior analyst in the Americas Division of Environment and Climate Change Canada. Originally from Winnipeg, Manitoba, throughout her undergraduate career Mary has focused on a variety of different issues in international affairs, ranging from development, to environmental governance, to international institutions. During her third-year, she undertook an internship in the rural highlands of Guatemala where she managed three small to medium-sized development projects focused on environmental sustainability and health in indigenous communities in addition to undertaking the research featured in this journal. Mary is passionate about developing an international system that prioritizes the needs of the world’s most vulnerable and emphasizes community-driven development, with a specific focus on the empowerment of women and girls.

Christopher Wieczorek is a third-year student studying Political Science and History at Dalhousie University. Chris has academic interests in multilateral decision-making processes, global food regimes and food security, and the politics of environmentalism and environmental movements. When not researching or writing he tries to get outdoors as much as possible - both in Halifax and in his hometown of Victoria - and also has three beehives which he (somewhat) successfully maintains. Upon completing his final year at Dalhousie Chris hopes to travel and then pursue a yet-to-be-determined Master’s degree.